Every resource that your users access remotely using EZproxy must be configured in the config.txt file. This file contains a listing of the databases that you subscribe to with instructions for EZproxy about what resources within those databases users are allowed to access. The instructions are the directives, and when combined, these directives form database stanzas. When your users attempt to access a database, after they have been authenticated, EZproxy reads your institution's list of resources and directives in the config.txt file and determines whether or not the resource the user is trying to access is available to your users, and either grants access (by rewriting the URL into a proxied URL) or denies access.
